ORTHOPEDICS PROGRESS NOTE

Encounter No.: 23960841

DATE OF VISIT: 08/14/2008

SUBJECTIVE: The patient is following up for frozen shoulder. He continues to have significant tightness when he moves the right side. He had a manipulation under anesthesia on the opposite left shoulder. His pain has gotten a lot better but he is very stiff now. His injury was on 06/01/2008, so it has been about three months.

OBJECTIVE: Well-nourished, well-developed male in no apparent distress. Alert and oriented x 3. Mood and affect within normal limits. Right shoulder has active and passive range of motion only 80/0/lateral pelvis compared to the left shoulder which is 180/80/T12.

His MRI previously showed no major problems. No rotator cuff tears.

ASSESSMENT: A 49-year-old male with right frozen shoulder.

PLAN: The patient has made some improvement especially with pain, but because he required manipulation on the other side and he has such poor motion, we will hold a spot for manipulation under anesthesia in two months, and will see him back a week before or so to see how he is doing, and see if we can postpone that if doing well.
